BERNARD'S UPLIFT.

It Was Gradual but It Was Sure. Sam Bernard, the comedian of "The Century Girl," being in what he described as an autobiographical mood. last Wednesday "figured up" that in his long career of forty years experi-ence on the stage he has been the star of exactly twenty plays.

"There," said Bernard, pausing in the midst of adjusting the turned up putty nose he wears in the "Ballet thing, after being the star of twenty plays, here I am one of twenty stars in this mammoth production. You now, if I hadn't been a theatrical star I would still have been a headliner, for I'd have gone in for the job of putting heads on stories for some newspaper. Getting the gist out of things is what appeals to me. Some times when a fellow writes me a song or an act or monologue I boil it down to about eight really good lines, throw away some twenty or thirty typewritten sheets of manuscript and write the rest of the stuff myself around se pithy eight lines or so. 'Pon my word, I believe I could throw into one entence what some of those journalistic chaps take three volumes to say.

"I give you my word of honor, I put just as much effort and just as much pleasure and gave just as much of myself in my work back in the old days when I first went on the stage at the Grand Duke's Theatre as when my salary first began to go up in the hundreds. Dick and I were not nearly as

"Despite its aristocratic sounding name, the Grand Duke's Theatre, which stood at the corner of Baxter and Worth streets, had oil lamps for Mrs. Isaac N. Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. | footlights and long wooden benches. Perhaps one reason I put my heart into my work was because whenever I got the least bit discouraged I used to look over the audience and say to myself: 'Better to be doing some fool stunt up here and getting paid for it than to be seated in one of those hard, stiff backed benches and giving up five cents for it.' Five cents, you see, was all the house charged for admission.

"My brother and I were a sort of Harrigan & Hart team. We kept on playing to five cent houses in basement theatres, side streets near the old Bowery and small towns in Jersey, until, not being able to get a hearing fered our services for a benefit performance, hoping to be seen by a bet-
